

Federal Protection Services and Worksite Compliance

Doing business with the federal government can be a lucrative opportunity but also an extremely challenging process. As the former head of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and the former director of the Department of Homeland Security's Federal Protective Service (FPS) we are well aware of the predicament that private contractors often find when competing and complying with a federal contract. Accordingly, Immigration and Customs Solutions, LLC and Shingler Associates have teamed together to provide prospective guard contractors a wealth of experience to tap when competing for and securing coveted federal contracts in a crowded field.

We believe that opportunities for private guard services will continue to grow as security needs continue to expand. As a result, already we're seeing significant growth in the number of 8(a) businesses looking to get into the market. At the same time competition is increasing, so too are standards and compliance oversight from the federal government and congressional monitors. Small guard contracting services must therefore stand out amongst competitors, to include having the necessary business model and practices in place to mitigate oversight concerns.

Because of this growing oversight and the need for greater assurances from contractors, best pricing is becoming a less important factor that wins contracts. Agencies like ICE and the U.S. Marshals Service are increasingly awarding contracts to companies that can demonstrate the greatest commitment to quality of services and sound business practices.

Process Guidance for Federal Protection Services
